Background to the Conference

The 5th International Conference on Structural Genomics (ICSG 2008) will be held in Oxford, UK on September 20-24th. The biennial Conference is the premier meeting for the Structural Genomics scientific community world-wide and is hosted on behalf of the International Structural Genomics Organisation (ISGO) by Professor David Stuart at the University of Oxford Division of Structural Biology. The Conference has already secured sponsorship from the major EC supported structural biology projects SPINE2-COMPLEXES and TEACH-SG.

The ICSG 2008 will bring together the most prominent and influential scientists in Structural Genomics and structural biology to present their original research, summarise the state of the art in the field, present new technology applications, assess the impact of structural biology on wider biological issues and plan future directions. It will provide a forum where students, scientists and technology providers can come together for formal presentations and informal discussions.

The Scientific Program will contain main scientific sessions, poster sessions, breakout discussion groups for specific topics and a social program and we expect to attract a worldwide audience of 500 delegates.
